McEwan Wallace have been accountants to this Medical Centre for well over 15 years and have shown a great deal of expertise in the finances of our 3 GP practices and how the NHS systems work. We have the right chemistry to create new opportunities

The medical profession in general is facing wide-ranging reorganisation on a scale unprecedented since the creation of the welfare state. When primary care trusts and strategic health authorities are abolished in 2013, GP consortia will become responsible for an £80 billion healthcare budget, which means forward planning has never been more crucial.

In addition, the dental profession must cope with major challenges to financial management as the shortage of NHS dentists is addressed by the government's increase in the number of units of dental activity (UDAs).

Our specialist medical services team provides clients with direct access to expert financial advice. Their experience includes working closely with a number of medical and dental practitioners in areas including profession-specific accountancy, developing business plans, practice-related finance and tax issues.
